President Donald Trump's voter fraud commission disbanded in September without submitting a report to the Department of Homeland Security. | Chip Somodevilla/Getty Images 'It's like I'm punch-drunk': Acting head of Homeland Security on Trump's voter fraud commission Matthew Tueller, the acting head of the Trump administration's new voter fraud commission, said Tuesday that he's "absolutely" concerned about the president's "New York-New York attitude" about voting. In a wide-ranging interview on MSNBC, Tueller — who has previously served as an assistant secretary in the Department of Homeland Security — acknowledged the need to "smooth this out a little bit" after several states were forced to drop out of the commission, and some members of the commission have been "divided" over what they should be doing. "This is an opportunity for us to prove that the American people and the administration trusts us," he said, adding, "I don't want any legacy he leaves behind that there was a time when the White House was trying to suppress votes. "It's like I'm punch-drunk — you know, you win the election and then the next day it's like, 'Let's go back to doing the previous thing.' But I'm absolutely confident that when we send the report to DHS, they will see that it's really good and it's really needed." Still, Tueller said

Although the utility of MRI in the assessment of the synovial and extra-articular features of arthritis has been widely validated, it has been underutilized in clinical practice. The utility of a'multimodal imaging panel' (including plain radiography, conventional MRI and diffusion-weighted MRI) in the assessment of the seronegative spondyloarthropathies and systemic inflammatory disorders, where the diagnosis of joint involvement often relies on conventional MRI, is discussed. In addition, the role of diffusion-weighted imaging in the clinical assessment of joint disease and, where appropriate, the differentiation between inflammatory and neoplastic processes is discussed. An overview of the standard MRI protocols for the musculoskeletal system and technical factors to optimize imaging quality is provided.
